Katia Krafft spent her life chasing volcano eruptions. In the weeks leading up to International Women's Day, we will be sharing excerpts from "Brazen: Rebel Ladies Who Rocked the World," by Pénélope Bagieu. In these illustrations, we'll learn about space pioneers and queens, doctors and athletes. This week, we're bringing you a look at Katia Krafft, a volcanologist who dedicated her life to exploring the wonders of volcanoes and educating at-risk populations about potential dangers.

BRAZEN

Queen Nzinga demanded to be treated as an equal and refused to take a king.

Mae Jemison was the first black woman in space. She's spent her life proving people wrong.

Female doctors were illegal in Greece. So Agnodice dressed up as a man to save lives.

ABOUT

A product of The Washington Post, The Lily of today is a place for the curious minded and for those who want to be heard.