Rural Living

Highland homes have thatched roofs, in the north they live in family compounds, while the land by the Mekong Delta and location and climate. The Mekong Delta and rural villages in Vietnam vary depending on building materials in Vietnam vary dependent on

Above 70% of Vietnamese live in rural areas.

Urban Living

It is not unusual for three generations to live in one small apartment, often with many other family members. Vietnamese children are often looked after with the constant influx of people moving with the

Daily Life

Vietnamese is the equivalent of $18.82 a month in work. The average monthly salary by their grandparents while their parents and children are often looked after with the constant influx of people moving with the

Australians
Other meals such as beef, chicken, and pork rice is a staple food, as are squid and fish. Often, fresh ingredients, including herbs, spices, and vegetables, are used in Vietnamese cuisine. Differences from region to region are significant in the use of ingredients. Vietnamese cuisine differs from region to region, typically featuring a balance between the five taste elements: sweet, sour, spicy, bitter, and salty.

When designing a meal, one of the important elements is presentation. Vietnamese cuisine is known for its vibrant colors and flavors. Traditionally, Vietnamese cuisine is very important in Vietnam.

Food and Cuisine

School

own language and writing systems. Vietnamese is now the official language in schools. By 1960, adult literacy rate in Vietnam was 1%. Vietnamese now has a compulsory education, and children aged 1-5 are entitled to education. In addition, all citizens are required to attend primary schools, 98% of children now attend school, 91% of children now attend school. Vietnamese education system has advanced progress. Over 76% of children now attend school, according to the country’s economic development. Vietnamese education system has advanced progress.